To Whom It May Concern:

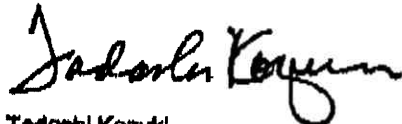

Dear Sir or Madam:

We are new members of the organic farming community, having received our certification in 2006. When we were considering organic farming, we felt comfortable because with our apples, we knew certain chemicals and pesticides were approved for organic use. I still remember discussing this point with my brothers. Pheromone disruption strips for codling moth and streptomycin for fire blight were available and we considered those two problems as the greatest for organic apples.

There's nothing else organic farmers can use for fire blight in apples. The removal of streptomycin from the organic "arsenal" would be devastating to the grower. We urge you to keep streptomycin on the approved list for organic growers.

Thank you for your consideration

Sincerely,

Tetsushi Kozuki
